

Cailíní

“Cailíní” meaning “girls” in Gaelic, is the meeting of two exceptional Celtic women singers and musicians.

Through their compositions and performances, Joanne McIver from Scotland and Ciara Brennan from Ireland offer pure, unadorned music. With a blend of strength and sensitivity, their alchemy reveals the secrets of the Celtic soul...

Cailíní

Ciara Brennan

A multiple winner of the prestigious “All Ireland Fleadh Championship” in fiddle, singing, and lilting (rhythmic chant), Ciara is a regular guest on Irish television and has toured extensively in North America, Canada, and Europe. Born in Dublin, Ciara has always been immersed in traditional Irish music and performs with several highly acclaimed ensembles, including the Maurice Lennon Trio and Kila. With her deep voice and compositions, Ciara truly embodies the spirit of Ireland...

Joanne McIver

A singer, musician, and composer, Joanne McIver grew up on the Isle of Arran, off the southwest coast of Scotland. With her pure, crystalline voice, Joanne sings of the places of her childhood and the history of her homeland. As the official piper for the British Embassy in Paris, she has performed over 1,000 concerts worldwide, released 12 albums, and collaborated with legendary artists such as Alan Stivell and Pierre Perret.

Proud of her Scottish roots, Joanne is a leading figure in Celtic music on the international stage.
